“ I really enjoyed every second I spent with Hack, he was a very caring man that was full of knowledge that a young man like myself was eager to listen, learn, and remember what he would say. I would often talk to him about the military since we have both served honorably, but just many decades apart. I enjoyed it very much talking and listening to the good old days when he was in the service and how they would live long ago in the Army. I would tell him often about all the different ways the Army would use the big technology and he would often let me know how he would do it many ages ago. We got very close being as we are what I considered brothers in arms. I remember stopping by talking to Hack when he had gotten sick and feeling to never leave his side. I loved that man, respected him, and admired him an outrageous amount that I just can't put a measurement on how much. The last time we seen each other and spoke he had lost quite a bit of weight, and I remember shaking his hand often, but that day I held his hand for quite some time, spoke to each other just like always, but I had trouble holding my tears back when I told him I loved him. He is such a good man, and he told me he loved me too. We gave each other a nice hand shake which we couldn't keep from doing and I'll never forget it wouldn't be long until god would gain the most amazing, honest, most admirable angel. Rest in Peace Hack and like we said til we see one another again. I'll always love and respect you, and miss you dearly. Thank you for the talks, the life lessons I learned from you, and how important it is to treat people like you would want to be treated. I salute you old friend.
